risk—almost a certainty—of losing it altogether.

The loss of the export tea trade by China is to be regretted on many counts. It is a good and profitable industry for the Chinese, and the product is a valuable one to the English people. The Chinese tea—whether it is not of course include the deleterious rubbish, at one time shipped in large quantities to London—is dietetically superior in many respects to the rougher teas of Assam and Ceylon, which contain more tannin and make a stronger, darker coloured, and more acid infusion. Very valuable testimony to the superiority of China tea over its two most successful rivals has recently been given by an influential personage, whose opinion is entitled to much weight and may possibly command some attention among more educated consumers. We refer to Sir ANDREW CLARK, who in a lecture delivered the other day to the students of the London Hospital extolled on tea as "a blessed beverage," and very emphatically declared his preference for the leaf of China. After speaking on the very general misuse of tea, he learned medics said:—"Tea to be useful should be, first of all, black China tea—the Indian tea which is being cultivated has become so powerful in its effects upon the nervous system that a cup of it taken early in the morning, as many people do, to disorders the nervous system that those who take it actually get into a state of tea intoxication, and produces a form of nerve disturbance which is most painful to witness. If you want to have, either for yourselves or for your patients, tea which will not injure and will refresh, get black China tea, putting in the right measure—the old-fashioned tea-spoonful for each person, and one for the blessed pot. Then pour on briskly boiling water, and within five minutes, you must pour it off again, or it will become wicked instead of good. Let this patient, therefore, have half a pint of milk and water or coconuts, or half a pint of tea, d' Clark if you please." Sir ANDREW CLARK is not aware, we fear, that the tea he so thoroughly appreciates may soon become a rare commodity difficult to obtain, owing in part to the vitiated taste of the British public.

Yesterday afternoon His Excellency Luen Chik, the Inspector-General of Customs, on his visit to His Excellency Sir William Robinson, Leaving Victoria Hotel at twenty minutes past three, he proceeded by way of Wetham Street and Gloucester to Government House, arriving there at half-past three. The procession attracted some attention. His Excellency was accompanied by a black sedan-chair borne by four coolies, and supported by two men in uniform, one in front and behind, while two coolies in the van carried his hat and his umbrella.

The Mercury says that the Wuchang lightship, Captain Orford, arrived off the Amherst Rocks on the 8th inst. She was taken in tow by the Customs Revenue cruiser Ping Ching and reached the port of the Amherst on the 10th inst. The Wuchang will undergo certain repairs, and return next spring to resume another season's duty.

The following extract from a private letter, dated 1st August, received from Peking, is given as a reliable confirmation:— "I have just heard of the troubles which are beginning in the north, the murder of the native authorities in this province and at Tientsin. The missions are driven out and they are now in Tientsin. I have not heard full accounts yet as the news reaches here very slowly, and the government do not speak much about it to prevent excitement."

The Mercury learns from the North that Yuen Li Hung-chang and Shing Taotai have come to the conclusion, instead of appointing an assistant minister to the China Merchant Steamship Board, to send Mr. Li Hien to an important matter with Mr. Hien, the director. These selected are Messrs. Tong, Chia, and Yin. Mr. Tong is the agent, Mr. Chia the chief of the general office and Mr. Yin the chief of the accountants' office.

the document corrected and signed by him. The learned counsel then read the document which was produced in the criminal case, and which led to the laying of the criminal charge. The court, however, noted the wording of the document. The statement of the facts by Mr. Ward and Mr. Smith is not that they believe or that they have been informed that such things have happened, but categorical statements are here set down in historical form as though to resemble an indictment. One after another distinct allegations are made. It does not say that they suppose or believe that the things mentioned are true, but it does say that such things have been taken place and a clear cat-geotical statement is made.

You will have an opportunity by-and-by of seeing how much or how little either of the parties know about the masters which the man is in fact. You cannot avoid noticing in this document the fact that when the rebels are mentioned it is that what the rebels are doing is ridiculous and impudent. That is to say that they suppose or believe that the rebels are not men of much sense, but a dozen good-natured friends that would willingly sign a testimonial. For that matter if a cartridge contains dozens of men who at one time would have obtained not only six, but sixty and six hundred signatures to a certificate of the same, the rebels are not fit for purpose. The regulation is that when the rebels are mentioned it is that what the rebels are doing is ridiculous and impudent. If the scrip is valid when a demand is made for it, the buyer can have no real interest in knowing from whom he bought. A mining scrip is practically a negotiable document, and as long as it is certain to be genuine there is no reason for asking the name of the last holder than that the man who signs it is the man who profits a bank-note. The regulation that is likely to hamper business is that which specifies that the numbers of the scrip must be specified in the sold and bought notes. Many cases might easily be imagined in which this rule would be unworkable. A bond for a sum of money might be issued by the rebels. A Mongol prince also lost his life, whether by suicide or murder is not yet known. The number of rebels are estimated variously from 500 to 30,000. It is difficult to strike the medium.—Messey correspondent.
